[Updated] I'm not sure what you exactly want to do. But according to the doc. You can customize your footer by using the attribute footer for Modal. According to the updated document (Aug 31, 2021), we only need to use footer={null} and don't have to use footer={null, null} anymore. Here is the sample: Test For No TWO buttons on the footer. BTW, if you want to do Login and close the Modal by clicking one button, you need to invoke the handler function (handleOk) and set the visible option to false inside of it. (Nowadays, antd has great documents and you can check them to find more examples. I wrote and rewrote this example since there were few examples doing that at that time.) // A handler/callback function handleLogin = () => { this.setState({ loading: true }); setTimeout(() => { this.setState({ loading: false, visible: false }); }, 3000); }; // Add a customized button to the footer footer={ [Login ,] } Login pages are an integral part of websites. Most login forms have a simple design but there are ways to make them inviting and even amusing. Login forms are the most used element of a website. They can appear as one line in the header of the site or have a separate page designated for them. To add a login form to a website it is best to use Bootstrap login form templates. They are easy to customize and insert into an existing site. Here is a collection of free Bootstrap login form templates with excellent designs.
